Final Product Brainstorming
Weekly Report 18
01-21-19 to 01-27-19

This past week I have taken the time to reflect on the past semester. I have come to realize how much I have grown and how much I still need to grow. Reflecting on the original work has created a basis for the final product in the second semester.

One thought that was filling my head with curiosity and anxiety this past week was the final product. On Friday a mentor visit with Elizabeth Hendershot took place with the purpose of brainstorming ideas for the final product. I mentioned to Ms. Hendershot that I really wanted to focus on fashion history for this final product. Before this mentor visit, I was stumped and did not know what to do for my final product. Thanks to the mentor visit, Ms. Hendershot helped me come up with an idea of a 3D fashion timeline. I am incredibly grateful that I get to bounce off ideas with someone that is incredibly experienced in the fashion industry. With her advice, I now have a deeper understanding of what my final product should be. A goal for the next week is to develop a more clear idea and plan of how my final product should be executed.